Lab exercise

This exercise is about adding video, audio and external documents to you solution from the previous lab exercise. Feel free to copy the files needed from the previous lab start folder.

You must finalize this exercise and add the following. You can see my solution on the next pages.

First you must do the following

1. Use your smartphone and make a mp3 recording where you read out loud the introduction text.

2. Use your smartphone and make a video recording where you wave with one hand and say "Hello".

3. Transfer the files to your laptop by email or other platforms.

Add this to index.html:

1. Add the mp3 file below the introduction text. Show audio controls.

2. Create a new (empty) html file called alive.html. You do that by right-clicking in the start folder and select New file from the dropdown menu.

3. Create a link to that file from index.html. The link text must be "Alive and learning".

Add this to alive.html:

1. You must start by copying in the content from the HTML document template.

2. Add a heading 1 with the text "Alive and learning".

3. Add a link to the index.html with the link text "Home".

4. Add a heading 2 with the text "I say hello".

5. Add the video recording with a width of 800.

6. Add a heading 2 with the text "Learning Multimedia Design (national part)

7. Add the file "docs/curriculum-multimedia-design-august-2018-national-part.pdf" so that you can scroll through its content. It must have a width of 800 and a length of 600.

About Morten Bonderup

Introduction

I teach at Erhvervsakademi Aarhus. I currently have my primary work assignments in the Multimedia Designer education and teaching in front-end technologies such as HTML, CSS and Javascript. Previously, I taught at our top-up programme in Digital Concept Development.

What interests me is how technology can improve human living conditions, both in working life and in private life. In short: How can technology help make the world a better place to live? Identifying problems and testing technologies on reality and then communicating theories, methods and results is my passion.
